Scientific Journals abound in our country, yet there is only one single organ for those who are immersed in the field of Aviation Medicine. India, now has a number of Doctors and technical people who come across Aero Medical problems, yet contributions to this journal are a bare minimum. We have often asked members of the Aero Medical Society to send in their contributions yet the response is extremely poor. It is our endeavour to produce a very scientific and charming journal which would bring a good name to this society.

Your experiences however minor, would give a greater insight into Aero-medical problems to other members. If you feel shy of writing let us assure you that scientific writing does not involve any tricks of journalism. Simple language, accurate facts, statistically tabulated with correct grammar is all that we need. If you have any doubts, we will, with your permission, refer the article to an expert and rearrange it without distorting the facts.

Members may not be aware that this journal has international distribution and contributions in this, have been quoted in articles published abroad. This year we have enquiries from a leading firm in UK dealing with distribution of Scientific literature to include this journal on their mailing list. Your article, therefore has international reading and would positively stimulate a lot of minds all over the world. The time to write is right now. Some experience in aviation medicine which has made you wiser, share it with others.

We have tried to give a new look to the journal, and we hope you will like it. Help us in making this journal a masterpiece of scientific literature. Do write to us how you feel about this journal and send in your suggestions to make it better.
