

Message from the President of the Society

I consider it a great privilege to be endowed with the honour of being the President of this august Society. It would be my endeavour to live up to the responsibility and expectations of the post. My association with the society has not come just with the change of uniform but I have been keenly interested in its activities for many years. The fact that I became a life member quite some time back while still in army uniform shows my interest in Aerospace Medicine.

The activities and achievements of the society speak for themselves and I have no hesitation in saying that it will continue to progress and prosper in the future too. I wish all its members the very best and urge them to contribute with even greater vigour. As most members might already be knowing, the ISAM has been entrusted with hosting the International Congress on Aviation and Space Medicine 1994 in India. This indeed is a great honour to all of us and we will collectively make it a grand success.

Finally I would advise the members particularly the younger ones to take up life membership of the society which in the long run would benefit the members as well as the society.
